

FRAGRANCES

Most people, when asked to give a Greensky product the “smell test,” report a mildly pleasant scent with no identifiable fragrance at all—which is exactly what we hope to hear. Our goal is always to achieve a predominantly neutral presentation. At the same time, we want our serums and creams to have a pleasant first smell experience. Sometimes, that means masking ingredients like tea tree oil and organic alcohol that would otherwise lend a medicinal smell to a product.

A quality skin care product doesn’t have to smell bad to be healthy! Depending on its makeup, adding a small amount of natural fragrance may benefit a product’s overall presentation and the enjoyment derived from using it. GreenSky does not add synthetic fragrances to any of its products.

For Mature Skin:

Lumina Serum

Lumina’s delightfully subtle and completely natural fragrance is derived from its rose flower water and natural citrus extracts.

Oasis Facial Moisturizer

Oasis benefits from a touch of genuine rose otto oil from Bulgaria, which imbues the cream with a very light scent of freshly cut roses.

Argana Body Oil

Argana has an overall neutral presentation, as a body oil should, with just a touch of genuine jasmine absolute sambac from India to lend it a faint sultry quality.

Jasmine absolute sambac is considered the most masculine of fragrant oils, with a deep, sultry scent void of the flowery quality of other varieties. It's interesting to note that it takes 8,000 hand-picked blossoms to produce a single gram of it (about 1 milliliter), which is why it's so dear (more than twice the cost of CBD).

Gage Serum and Gage Moisturizer for Men:

Both contain a touch of pure sandalwood oil to lend them a very subtle "woody" scent that men will especially like.

KlearSkin Serum and KlearSkin Moisturizer:

Both have an overall neutral presentation with a hint of eucalyptus from their organic tea tree oil.

Azure Serum and Azure Moisturizer (zero CBD):

Both have a mostly neutral fragrance with a hint of garden herbs owing to a touch of organic lavender oil.
